Why Work with an MGA?

Insurance is a complicated business. When choosing policies, understanding potential exposures is critical, but also tricky. An MGA (otherwise known as a managing general agent) is an underwriter that, by its very nature, understands those risks and designs a suite of programs to address them. The knowledge that an MGA gains over decades of responding to one industry – in World Wide's case, insurance for staffing firms – ensures that an MGA is nimble, spotting trends before they occur and advising clients how best to avoid potential snares and gaps in coverage – risks they may not have thought of themselves.

In catering insurance solutions for the staffing industry, one size does not fit all. An MGA does not project or guess at what's coming down the pipeline; rather, they analyze and understand industry trends and then tailor insurance products to minimize risk. An MGA knows which claims to expect, why they arise, and how best to guide and inform clients – a value-added service culled from years of underwriting experience.

By dedicating itself to the security of their clients, an MGA helps increase clients' profitability through education, information and rapid response.
